"Living a Catholic Life" is a collaboration between dioceses, parishes, Knights of Columbus councils, grassroots organizations, and The National Catholic Bioethics Center to educate the laity on principles of the moral life and their application.

While many contemporary movements use the terms steward ship, dominion, and autonomy, the Catholic Church remains rather unique in her employment of all three concepts to help her sons and daughters understand the moral demands of following Christ. While all ethical discourse is relational, not all contemporary ethical discourse is relational in the two senses of being both horizontal and vertical. Human beings have obligations to each other and to the world around them, which is the horizontal dimension of ethics. But we also have obligations to the God above us, which is the vertical dimension. An ethic based on only one dimension, the horizontal ethic of secular humanism, for example—will have a far different look than an ethic based on both. Our study of these three concepts involves us in nothing less than the heart of an authentic Christian anthropology: the human being is indecipherable without a reference to the God who cre ates and sustains and who shares dominion with his children.

Autonomy is a word often used by philosophers. Thomas Shannon gives a standard definition: "Autonomy is a form of personal liberty of action in which the individual determines his or her course of action in accordance with a plan of his or her own choosing" (An Introduction to Bioethics, 4th rev. ed., intro.). As Gaudium et spes makes clear, when properly understood, auton omy is in full concordance with the Christian message: "If by the autonomy of earthly affairs we mean that created things and societies themselves enjoy their own laws and values which must be gradually deciphered, put to use, and regulated by men, then it is entirely right to demand that autonomy. Such is not merely required by modern man, but harmonizes also with the will of the Creator." Improperly understood, however, autonomy proves destructive of authentic human good: "But if the expression . . . is taken to mean that created things do not depend on God, and that man can use them without any reference to their Creator, anyone who acknowledges God will see how false such a meaning is. For without the Creator the creature would disappear" (Vatican Council II, Gaudium et spes, n. 36). Article to continue next week...
